NEEDLES & PINS

I guess as long as I live I will have those nightmares. The dream is always the same. There is a terrible struggle. Then suddenly I shout at the top of my voice, "I must live! I have to get through!"

I awake and there are cold beads of perspiration dripping down my forehead. My wife already is busy wiping them away. No use trying to get any more sleep. So I arise from my bed and go into the kitchen. She prepares some tea for me. Then into the living room I go and head for a big overstuffed easy chair. My wife starts my collection of recordings and I find relaxation listening to the opera.

Go ahead and tell me it shouldn't be this way! The specialists have said exactly what you would say: "Forget it, and act as though it never happened." Very easy to say. But how can I ever forget that once the destiny of our civilization was in my hands? How can I ever forget that it was up to me to save our people from being defeated by that madman dictator?

They told me that now I can tell my story. Who knows? Maybe at least I will feel better. When people would ask me, "Well, what did you do in World War II?" I would merely smile and say nothing. Now I can show them the medals. The highest decorations my country and the allied nations could give me.

We had made our landings in France. We were going on schedule and then the Nazis put up a tough resistance. It was on a Thursday morning that it all happened. I was in my study at the University preparing a series of new lectures in my field which is Comparative Literature. There was a knock on my door.

"Come on in," I said.

The door opened and an army officer accompanied by two civilians entered. I recognized one of my graduate students, Bill Thompson, who had enlisted in the army two years ago. He was wearing a captain's bars.

"How are you, Professor Ostrow?" he greeted me.

"The same," I replied. "A bit overage for the draft. And my doctor can't give me a clean bill of health. So I remain here in the University while you young ones fight for Democracy."

No sooner had I finished then I became conscious that the two civilians were giving me the "once over." They were eyeing me carefully from head to my feet.

"Anything wrong, gentlemen?" I demanded. "Is there a wanted notice for me?"

"Same height, same build, same face, and same eyes. Remove his moustache and cut his head close and you have the double," said the man on the left.

"I agree with you one hundred per cent," replied the man on the right.

"I read mysteries now and then," I interrupted. "When you read a book in the middle, you don't know how it ends nor how it begins."

"Come with us, Professor Ostrow," said Captain Thompson, "and you will know the answers. Your classes will be covered and your wife notified."

Both civilians showed me their identification cards. They were in the counter-espionage division of our army. I went with them in a car to an airfield. There was an army plane waiting for us. We were in the air for about two hours. Then the plane landed on a special guarded airfield. I was conducted to a room and I sat down.

"Now you will tell me the mystery?" I said, trying my best to smile.

"Look straight at the wall ahead of you," said Captain Thompson. One of the men with him pressed a button. The wall moved aside. I was looking at a large glass window. It was what is known as a "one way window." I can see through it, but the party on the other side can't. And there in another room was my duplicate. He certainly was my double. With a few changes I could be him.

"The man you just saw," informed one of the counter-espionage agents, "is Colonel Ludwig Von Hassen. He is one of Hitler's most trusted men. He has complete power to do anything in Germany or in any of the occupied countries. He was captured three days ago and flown here. We want you to go to Nazi Germany and become Colonel Ludwig Von Hassen."

"I don't get it," I admitted. "What can I do?"

"Help in the greatest gamble for allied victory," explained Captain Thompson. "In the Dusseldorf region of Germany we know they have constructed a vast underground factory cut into the side of a mountain. Our bombers couldn't even dent it. Inside of that factory they are making a weapon that is to bring victory to Nazi Germany. It is almost ready for launching against us. The workers live in that factory. Only you, as Colonel Ludwig Von Hassen could get into it. Oh yes, he has a twin brother, Major Herman Von Hassen who is something of a modman. But he is in Paris."

The next forty-eight hours were lived in a race against time. I listened to recordings of Colonel Ludwig Von Hassen's voice. Because I spoke perfect German, French, Italian, and Spanish, I felt I could do anything in my voice range. Off came my moustache. My hair got a close clipping. I fitted into the Colonel's uniform perfectly. Then by special plane I went to France. Captain Thompson accompanied me. We were waiting for a foggy night which finally came.

"We are going in a special light plane. Fly low. I will drop you at a distance from a German railroad station. The gun in your holster looks like a luger. It is loaded with a clip of special bullets. If you shoot them, they have terrific explosive force. Ask no questions about them. You have an extra clip with you and also a lot of German money. Find out what they are making inside that factory. Then blow it up."

We landed the plane several hours later in a field. I walked out and headed for a road. Turned left and soon found myself at a small railroad station.

"When does the next train leave for Schwartzgold?" I asked. This place was thirty miles from Dusseldorf. "In an hour," he told me. Then I almost made a blunder. Wanted to purchase a ticket. He looked at me in a puzzled manner.

"Anything the Colonel wants is his. He needs no money. I make out the ticket for you, and of course, you get a compartment for yourself."

The train stopped and the agent took me to my compartment. It was going to be a long run. I told the conductor I wanted to be served in my compartment and not to be bothered.

"You have but to order and I do it," was what he said.

When the train arrived at Schwartzgold, a German lieutenant came up and saluted me.

"Your brother, Major Von Hassen is outside in his car. Come, I will escort you to him."

I could feel my heart beating a million miles a second. What to do? If I said no, that would arouse suspicion. So I followed him. Outside in a car was my double. My brother saluted me and the lieutenant opened the door of the car. I entered.

"To the Hotel Linden," he said to the chauffeur.

Not a word did my brother say to me. I thought he took a quick but expert glance at my face. We came to the hotel and you should have seen everyone salute us. We were given two rooms by my brother's orders.

"I know you want to rest by yourself," he said.

I was on pins and needles. Went to my room and didn't sleep. Was on guard all night. The next morning I dressed and ate my breakfast. My brother called on me and said we were going to the Dusseldorf plant. I could hardly believe my ears! The chauffeur drove us there. Naturally we had no trouble getting inside. All the men crowded around me. I was shown around the plant. What were they making? A plane that used no motor or propeller! The first jet planes in the world. And there were tanks of the special fuel near the planes.

"Tomorrow we send them up into the air," said the officer next to me. "Victory will be ours."

"Colonel, may I see you alone for a minute?" said my double, Major Von Hassen.

I walked with him the length of the plant and around so that we were near the entrance. Then I felt his gun in my back.

"I could sense you didn't trust me," he whispered. "You must have figured I was a double sent out by the British in place of your brother. Come out with me. We'll get back."

In that second I died a thousand deaths. He would kill me and the plant wouldn't be destroyed. All he could do would be to warn his country and mine. I threw my body to the side. He fired once. I kicked him hard. Down he went. Out come my gun and I fired twice at one of the gas tanks. Up it went in flames. I dragged the unconscious man with me outside. Threw him into the car.

"Drive any place," I shouted in English. "There's going to be a terrible explosion."

"Then you are one of us," said the driver. "We'll go to our rendezvous."

That plant went and so did half of Dusseldorf. Sure, I was a man's double but how was I to know his double also had a double?

THE RAIDERS OF WARD 5

I WENT INTO GUADALCANAL ON AUGUST 8, 1942--ONE OF CARLSON'S RAIDERS! WE DUG THE NIPS OUT OF THE JUNGLE, WENT INTO THEIR CAVES AFTER THEM, OR MET THEM IN THE JUNGLE DARKNESS, FIGHTING THEM WHEREVER WE COULD FIND THE ENEMY! I WAS AFTER A JAPANESE SNIPER NEAR HENDERSON FIELD WHEN THE ROOF FELL IN--

I WAS KNOCKED OUT FOR I DON'T KNOW HOW LONG...WHEN I CAME TO, I HEARD THEM MOVING NEAR ME...ONE OF THEM TURNED ME OVER WITH HIS FOOT...I HEARD HIS RIFLE HAMMER SNAP BACK! AND I COULDN'T MOVE...
